Purpose

To define the responsibility of workers towards participants and the organisation. For all workers to understand duty of care, the meaning of negligence and dignity of risk in relation to working with participants and for the organisation.

Who is this policy for?

This policy applies to all Identitywa workers.

Policy statement

Identitywa operates within its Mission, Vision and Values which embed the responsibility and protection of its participants accessing the services. Identitywa is committed to provide a safe environment for participants to thrive in and to live a good life. Identitywa extends this commitment to its workers and contractors, to provide a safe and healthy work environment.

What does ‘duty of care’ mean?

Duty of care means that person A has a duty to ensure that another person B or property, does not come to foreseeable harm or loss as a result of something that person A did or failed to do.

Duty of Care also means that a person A has a duty to the organisation, to follow policies and procedures, to report any wrong doings by others and to represent the organisation in its Mission, Vision, and Values.

For Identitywa this means to be aware of the skills, knowledge, and capabilities of its workers and to provide the necessary training to ensure that duty of care is met. As an employer, Identitywa also provides a safe work environment in which workers, as far as practicable, are not exposed to hazards.

All Identitywa workers have a ‘duty of care’ to the participants they support as well as to the organisation. The magnitude of the duty of care by a worker to a participant will vary depending upon things such as their role and responsibility, and the participants capacity. Workers are required to be aware of the individual(s) they are supporting, their required assistance level, and any possible risks associated with behaviour, different situations, and scenarios.

Workers are also aware of their own skills, capabilities, experience, knowledge, and limitations and will inform their manager, if they do not feel competent or confident in performing a task.

What is negligence?

Negligence is, when a person has a duty of care to another person and failed to act according to a reasonable standard that resulted in injury or harm to the other person. Some of the key words used in determining if a person has been negligent include, that the harm, injury, or loss was foreseeable, that it was predictable, and that reasonable care was not taken. Duty of care is breached if a person suffers harm, and it was reasonably foreseeable that this harm would occur.

What is meant by Dignity of Risk?

Participants are encouraged to make their own decisions and to experience the consequences of their decisions. This is called the Dignity of Risk. Dignity of Risk is based on the fact, that everyone learns by making mistakes. Participants are encouraged to develop skills to help them make decisions.

Dignity of Risk is not about allowing participants to take risks and chances that could harm them emotionally, physically, or financially. This may be seen as a breach of duty of care by the worker. There is a strong distinction between allowing someone to take a harmful risk and not allowing them to take any. Dignity of Risk is about the happy medium that supports an individual's right to develop.

Duty of Care and Dignity of Risk require careful consideration when working with participants. This is balancing the person's safety with the need to respect their right to freedom and to take risks. Workers are encouraged to seek advice from their supervisors, if in doubt about any situation of risk taking.

This policy should be read in conjunction with the various policies, procedures and guidance listed below under 'Other related documents.'
